“You probably noticed a banner reading ‘Uplifters Ranch’ over Latimer Road as you drove in. That’s because Rustic Canyon Recreation Center once belonged to the Uplifters—a fun-loving group of business and professional men from the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

Originally this land was the site of the nation’s first experimental forestry station, and part of the Edmond Ranch. In 1920 it came on the market, and was purchased by Harry Haldeman as a secluded country site for the Uplifter’s Annual Outing.

The group’s name referred both to the uplifting of the arts, and to the hoisting of cocktails. All members were urged to participate in some creative endeavor sponsored by the Club—chorus, band, drama, and operettas. Their rehearsals culminated in a series of performances at the Annual Outing, a 4-day men-only event each fall.

The Edmond ranch house served as the Uplifters’ first clubhouse, but was destroyed by fire in 1922. It was replaced by this building, designed by architect William Dodd, complete with large dining room (now the Gallery) and auditorium (Gym) with a stage and large pipe organ. The building was dedicated in September, 1923.

Each member of the Uplifters was allowed to lease a lot for $100, and many rustic log cabins were built around the clubhouse. Howard Latimer laid out the roads and stone walls, and built the first house (#1 Latimer Road).

By 1927 they had added a swimming pool, tennis courts, riding stables, and a full-fledged polo facility. Then, during the Depression, several of the original members lost their homes. Newcomers, mostly associated with the motion picture industry, built larger, more sophisticated homes. The clubhouse was run for profit by a professional manager, and, with Prohibition ended, liquor was served openly in the ‘Polo Lounge.’

In 1945 the polo field was subdivided by a realtor, and the clubhouse and grounds were sold in 1947 to Greek shipping magnate George Embiracos, who operated the facility as a post racquet club.

Embiracos offered the property for sale in 1953, and with a gift of $200,000 from Maybell Machris, the Santa Monica Canyon Civic Association purchased the 8-acre site. The SMCAA donated the property, along with the neighboring eucalyptus grove, to the Los Angeles City Department of Recreation and Parks, and on November 19, 1953, Rustic Canyon Recreation Center was born.”
